SATURDAY EVENING, OCTOBER 10.

THE GROWTH OF INFIDELITY IN PARIS.—On September 24th, M. Rochefort went to St Denis to administer to three children the rite of initiation, which is to supersede baptism among French Freethinkers. The proceedings commenced with a dinner in a small restaurant packed with fifty guests, who listened unmoved to the conversation with which the infidel reasoned the repast. Referring to his travels as having strengthened his patriotism he said: "I have seen that we are unquestionably the most independent nation on the earth. Look at England, that so-called classic land of liberty. Working men cannot throw off the shackles of religion. In America too, you are not allowed to be without religion." On the arrival of the desert, the badge of the St. Denis Society of Freethinkers were handed to M. Rochefort, who said: "We are about to proceed, not the baptism, but to the initiation of three little children to whom freedom from superstition. We must free ourselves from superstition before thinking of destroying tyrants. Our fathers did not have demolished the Bastille if they had not previously overthrown Christ." A young woman, with a baby in her arms, and a boy and girl of four or five, then timidly advanced and seated herself before M. Rochefort, who tied a broad red ribbon round the necks of each child. All present next signed a record of the ceremony, the usual toasts were drunk, and the ceremony was over.
